

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion. The number of people aged 65 and over has increased from 200 million to 350 million. The number of people aged 15–64 years has increased from 1.5 billion to 2.0 billion.

There are a number of factors that have contributed to the increase in the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age. One of the main factors is the increase in the number of people who are surviving into old age. This is due to a number of factors, including improvements in medical care, better nutrition, and a decline in the number of people who are dying from preventable diseases.

Another factor is the increase in the number of people who are having children. This is due to a number of factors, including a decline in the number of people who are having children at a young age, and a decline in the number of people who are having children at all. This is due to a number of factors, including a decline in the number of people who are having children at a young age, and a decline in the number of people who are having children at all.

The increase in the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a cause for concern. This is because it is likely to lead to a number of problems, including a shortage of resources, a shortage of jobs, and a shortage of social services. It is also likely to lead to a number of other problems, including a decline in the quality of life, and a decline in the standard of living.

There are a number of ways in which the problem of the increasing number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age can be addressed. One way is to improve the quality of life, and the standard of living. This can be done by a number of ways, including improving the quality of education, and the quality of health care. Another way is to reduce the number of people who are having children at a young age, and the number of people who are having children at all.

It is important to note that the problem of the increasing number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a global problem. It is not just a problem of the developing world, but a problem of the world as a whole. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is increasing in all parts of the world.

The problem of the increasing number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a complex problem. It is a problem that requires a number of different solutions. It is a problem that requires the cooperation of all countries, and all people. It is a problem that requires the cooperation of all countries, and all people.

The problem of the increasing number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a problem that is likely to become even more serious in the future. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase.

The problem of the increasing number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a problem that is likely to become even more serious in the future. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase.

The problem of the increasing number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a problem that is likely to become even more serious in the future. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase.

The problem of the increasing number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is a problem that is likely to become even more serious in the future. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase. This is because the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is likely to continue to increase.